A Dentist to Royalty.
"Dr. Evans," said my friend, "makes, perhaps, $50,000 a year from his practice. He is in demand at all the courts of Europe, and Queen Victoria is very fond of him. I was visiting with him once when he had a letter from the king of Greece, who wanted him to come and fix his teeth for him. He told me that he could not go, as the expense of traveling so far would eat up the profits. He said in going from court to court as a sort of itinerant king's dentist, he only made tours when he could lay them out so as to bring a number of courts in one trip. This practice paid very well, for, in addition to the immense fee which Dr. Evans charged, he was given presents of diamonds and other things of great value. Among his presents were diamond studded snuff boxes, fine rings, diamond pins, and fans which were almost worth their weight in gold. His house in Paris is filled with beautiful souvenirs, and he has presents from all the kings from the czar of Russia down to the prince of some petty dukedom."

I don't suppose any American has ever stood so close to a European throne as Dr. Evans did to that of Louis Napoleon. He came daily at 8 o'clock to the emperor and chatted with him while he was dressing. He then went to the dressing-room of Eugenie and talked English with the empress. Evans was a good gossip and retailed the talk of the court to Napoleon's wife. He was as good a friend of hers as she was of his, for he saved her life one night when an attempt was made to assassinate Napoleon, after the opera by throwing hand-grenades. He also helped her off to England in 1870, when every one else had deserted her. Evans' wife was at the seashore at the time, and Eugenie, in the clothes of Mrs. Dr. Evans, passed out of the city as the dentist's wife. He took her to the channel and went with her to England. Dr. Evans feared that France would lose in the struggle with Germany. He knew well the constitution of the German army and he warned both Louis Napoleon and Eugenie that they would probably be defeated if they began the war.—Frank G. Carpenter in Cleveland Leader.

Origin of Slanting Roofs.
To find the source from which the European nations have derived the art of building in stone, we must look to the land of the Pharaohs. From Egypt the craft passed to Greece, and from the Greeks it was taken up by the Romans, to be by them disseminated through the north and west of Europe in the process of colonization. The similarity, in regard to the constructive parts of the ancient Greek buildings to some of those found in Egypt of older date, affords strong confirmation of the tradition that the Greeks borrowed the art from the Egyptians. The Greeks, however, in adopting it, added a new feature, the pediment, and the reason for this addition is easy to find. Egypt is practically rainless. All the protection from the elements required in a palace or temple in such a country is shelter from the sun by day and from the cold by night, and for this a flat roof, supported by walls, or pillars with arcades, is quite sufficient; but when, as in all European countries, rain has to be taken into account, a slanting roof becomes a necessity.

The Greeks, with their eye for symmetry, provided for this by forming the roof with a central ridge, at an obtuse angle, from which it sloped down equally on either side. The triangular space thus formed at the end of the building, above the architrave, was occupied by the pediment, and this part of the facade, which owed its birth to the exigencies of climate, was thenceforth regarded as an essential to the artistic completeness of the work that it was said that if a temple were to be erected in the celestial regions, where rain would not be possible, the pediment could not be omitted.—Popular Science Monthly.

Grant's Constitutional Reluctance.
Grant's constitutional reluctance must be kept in mind by those who wish to appreciate his character. Because he did not speak was no reason to suppose he did not think or feel. It seemed to him immodest to cloak himself to the world, or even entirely to his most intimate friend. He could not, if he would, expose his opinions and sentiments to every one he met. He was indignant at those who sought to penetrate further than he chose to allow, and kept back something from them who got closest. He had secrets of business from one friend, of politics from another, of feeling from many; and no one knew all. I found out traits in his character in the last months of his life that I had not suspected before, and I doubt not that he had emotions and beliefs which he died without revealing to his wife or children. Yet no man ever loved wife or children more than he.—Adam Badeau's Letter.

Among the Green Mountain Peaks.
Somewhere there is a shudder when one sits quietly and alone and sees the light of day go utterly out upon these great peaks. It seems like going off into eternity all by yourself. I have never had such teachers of the great truths of life as the watching of the going out of day imparts to the captive spirit. It is worth traveling 1,000 miles to drink in these impressions and feel them taking captive your whole being. It is said that George Washington never smiled during the war with Great Britain. Life was too serious for that, and the feeling that possesses you when you have watched the mountains through their gradual investment with the mantle of night is that existence is a tremendous reality. I do not envy one who feels that these impressions are of no account.—Cor. Boston Herald.

Malaria and the Eucalyptus.
The banishment of malaria from the Roman campaign, by means of the eucalyptus tree has been so often announced as a fact, that it may be a surprise to many people to learn that, according to the recent demonstration of a scientific commission, whatever improvement has been effected in the sanitary conditions of Italy in this particular is the result simply of drainage and exposure of the humid soil to the direct rays of the sun, through the cutting away of forests. There is absolutely no proof that the eucalyptus trees deserve any credit at all. It is indeed affirmed, on the authority of Professor Lev. that the university of Sydney that there are in Australia large forests of eucalyptus in which malaria is very prev-
